2. General objectives

C1	This course aims at presenting to the students the critical problems in international relations in modern times, especially in the 20th century. The purpose is to highlight some of the main developments that shaped that period. The 20th century was marked by wars, the birth of new states, and rapid industrial growth that provided economic prosperity and growing political and economic interdependence as well as religious, ethnic, and national consciousness. The main questions addressed to the students will focus on a possible shift in global political and economic hegemony from the West to the East.
